Investor's Business Daily leads the coverage today with an examination of the increasingly attractive market vaccines represents, as illustrated by the Novartis-Chiron deal. CNN provides a roundup of the current events surrounding avian flu. Rounding out the coverage is an interview with Biogen Idec's VP of development, Burt Adelman, who discusses the company's attempt to refocus its development capabilities.

Feature Story

Growth In Demand For Vaccines Is Key To Novartis-Chiron Deal

Investor's Business Daily (Nov 22, 2005)

Until recently, drug makers avoided vaccines because profits were low and risks were high. That's changing. Vaccines are becoming as lucrative as drugs. Drug maker Chiron's vaccine business as well as its access to other growth markets are key reasons behind Novartis announcement that it will buy the 58% of Chiron it doesn't already own. Global Moves to Combat Flu Threat

CNN.com (Nov 22, 2005)

Global moves to combat the threat of avian flu are being stepped up, with China, the United States, Canada, Japan and North Korea all taking action to help stop the disease spreading. Read more >>

Biogen VP Evangelizes Over Not Made Here

Reuters (Nov 22, 2005)

But Adelman, Biogen Idec's executive vice president of development, has sent out on something of a crusade to create a much more external-looking development strategy and business culture. "The first thing we need to do is establish a cultural alignment that the idea not invented here is something to be proud of," he said. Read more >>
