Today is an important day for MPC and MPLX. As you know, MPC announced in 2013 that its long-term strategy is to grow its midstream and retail segments, to help balance the volatility that often characterizes our business. We have made tremendous progress in executing that strategy. Speedway's acquisition of Hess retail is a visible and successful example.

Today it is my pleasure to announce that we have taken another significant step in executing our strategy, this time in the midstream. MarkWest Energy Partners has agreed to merge with a subsidiary of MPLX. MarkWest Energy Partners is a master limited partnership with midstream assets in several of the nation's liquids-rich gas plays. In fact, it is the largest processor and fractionator in the Marcellus and Utica shale regions, which complements MPLX and MPC assets in the Midwest. MarkWest provides MPLX with a new platform to grow and create value for MPC shareholders and MPLX unitholders.

Our strategic combination with MarkWest is an important step in our strategy to build MPLX into a large-cap, diversified master limited partnership. Energy transportation and other logistics continue expanding to keep up with our nation's tremendous growth in energy resources. This MarkWest merger provides us with the opportunity to participate meaningfully in this build-out.

From our standpoint as employees, there will be very little change in our day-to-day work. MarkWest is a well-run company, with talented employees and an excellent management team. Their operations will continue to be run from their headquarters in Denver.

Today, members of the MPC and MPLX management team, myself included, are at the MarkWest headquarters discussing the merger with their employees and answering their questions. At MPC's next Town Meeting, scheduled for September fourth, we will provide a detailed overview of the transaction and answer your questions. In the meantime, I encourage you to listen to the conference call at 10 a.m. eastern time today.
