The following is the transcript of a video of Steve Laub, President and CEO of Atmel Corporation, and Jalal Bagherli, executive board director and CEO of Dialog Semiconductors plc, sent to employees of Atmel Corporation:

Steve Laub: Hi I'm Steve Laub I'm the President of Atmel Corporation, I've been CEO for 9 years and am very excited to be here and very exciting news for the combination of Dialog and Atmel together. You know, one of the things in our industry is you want to build and change to the world and the technologies that Dialog has and the technologies that Atmel is bringing, these two companies together now really provide a real change, a transformational change not just for the companies but I think for the industry as well. So we're very excited about what can be built here, what can be created here both from a technology stand point and from also engaging with our customers.

Stephen Welch: What about some of things that Atmel and Dialog can do together that maybe we couldn't do apart?

SL: Well for example one of things that is really terrific about the companies together - they're highly complementary from standpoint we have tens of thousands of customers we service customers throughout the world, many of tier one customers whether it be in North America, or in Europe, or Asia, and we have access to all these customer bases. Dialog has wonderful technologies, terrific products what they can do now is more readily access those customers by using our sales network and so forth in that way. Another example would be the technologies, Dialog has wonderful technologies in power management and so forth and we have technologies in micro controllers. You put those things together amongst security and other connectivity that both Dialog and Atmel have and you have wonderfully innovative types of solutions.

SW: What key message do you have Atmel employees?

SL: Now I think with any type of news like this, there is a lot of fear and hesitancy. One of the things that makes me very excited about this, is that both companies are much better together.

SW: and what about you what's your role going forward?

SL: You know, my role here is to support really Jalal, and the executive team at Dialog and the executive team at Atmel to pull together to make sure the combination as it comes together is the really the best in class company that be built.

SW: And if any Atmel employees has any questions, what should they do?

SL: We're going to be sending out a lot of information out to Atmel employees with respect to that, there are emails that went out today, there's going to be FAQs that are going out to the people as well Jalal and I will be working on communication plans so both of us can make sure we communicate to the Atmel employees very promptly and frequently.

SW: Great thank you very much

SL: Thank you.

Jalal Bagherli: A very exciting day for us. We've just announced the acquisition of a company called Atmel in the United States we're very excited about working together as two companies with a fantastic portfolio of products that encompasses not only mobile technology but also will take us to the forefront of the Internet of Things and we will have the most complete platform in the industry.

SW: Now Jalal, tell us a little bit about your background and career

JB: I started life as an electronic engineer and I focused on learning all about integrated circuit design by studying for a PhD in VLSI. I then joined semiconductor industry through joining Texas Instruments and after 9 years there I moved to a Japanese company, I worked for Sony Corporation and latter in my career I also ran a start up in Cambridge in the UK in video processing chips. 10 years ago, in fact on the day I joined Dialog Semiconductor for the first time working in the mixed signal company in Europe and we have been very successful in positioning the company for mobile applications, mobile customers particularly using Power Management technologies.

SW: And what's been the growth story of Dialog for the last 10 years?

JB: In the last 5 and 6 years in particular as the feature phones turning into smart phones and the advent of tablets we created the highest integration power management products for this industry and working with the top tier customers in this industry.

SW: And Atmel and Dialog working together can do some great things, can't they?

JB: They do fantastic things together, it's a very complementary story in terms of technology, products and also the talented people that we have seen in both companies.
