Petrobras will explore oil in the Colombian coast in the Caribbean Sea

(Rio de Janeiro, August 26, 2004). PETRÓLEO BRASILEIRO S/A - PETROBRAS, [Bovespa: PETR3/PETR4, NYSE: PBR/PBRA, Latibex: XPBR/XPBRA], a Brazilian international energy company, announces that today its affiliate, Petrobras Colombia together with Ecopetrol and ExxonMobil, have signed the first exploration and production contract with Colombia's National Hydrocarbon Agency (ANH) to begin exploration activities offshore Colombia.

The contract covers the 45-thousand-Km<sup>2</sup> Tayrona block, off Colombia's northern coast in the Caribbean Sea in water depths up to 3,000 meters. Petrobras has a 40 percent interest in the block with ExxonMobil also having 40 percent and Ecopetrol 20 percent.

During the initial 18-month-phase of the exploratory program, the participating companies will continue data acquisition and analysis, which includes re-processing 2D seismic, acquiring 3D seismic data and incorporation of a new technology.

Petrobras will be the operator of the Exploration Phase. In case of discovery of liquids reserves, Petrobras will keep operatorship for the development phase, otherwise ExxonMobil will act as operator.

Petrobras is in Colombia since 1985, currently with participation in 15 blocks of exploration and production, in its majority, as operator.

Petrobras International Director Mr. Nestor Cerveró stressed the importance of this event: The Tayrona block represents a very important step towards the consolidation of Petrobras as a major player in Latin America and an opportunity to use our exploration expertise in exploring deep waters outside Brazil, in compliance with the company's Strategic Plan, following the successful ventures in West Africa and the US Gulf of Mexico.
