Video message from NYSE Euronext CEO Duncan Niederauer to NYSE Euronext employees (emailed to employees June 14, 2011):

Hey Guys, before I head off to London and then to St. Petersburg for the week, I thought I would give you a quick update. It's Monday afternoon here in New York. Big week last week with shareholders, and at the start of the week we made a couple of big announcements that you probably saw that are related to the merger, and we think put us in an even better position to garner the votes in July, which I will talk about in a minute. So early in the week, both boards approved the payment of a special dividend, it will be two euros a share that will be paid to all shareholders of Newco as soon as practical after we get the merger closed, so hopefully very early 2012, and we also announced that Deutsche Börse, which has historically owned 85% of Eurex and the Swiss owned the other 15%. That JV was set to unwind in 2014, and we struck an agreement where we will unwind that JV on or around the time of the closing of our merger, so roughly three years early, and that and the dividend were both extremely well-received by shareholders. Now, we then stepped into really a full week of shareholder meetings last week.

The timing couldn't have been better. As we were putting out the press releases Tuesday morning here in New York, I was walking into an investor lunch with Larry and Mike and Steve and sponsored by Barclays Capital. So we did investor meetings on Tuesday, and Wednesday, I was in Boston with the DB Team, and on Thursday I was back here in New York with Reto and their CFO, and Friday we spent the entire day at the Sandler O'Neill conference meeting investors. So, I think during the week we probably met certainly more than 50, probably close to 75 investors during the week, some DB, some NYX, some both. And I think between the special dividend, the Eurex announcement, the momentum we already had, I came away from those meetings feeling very, very good.

Remember our vote is July 7th, the tender offer on the DB side expires shortly thereafter on the 13th, so hopefully by mid-July we'll be able to put that behind us and focus on the integration process and the regulatory process for the rest of the year. Speaking of the integration process, the teams from both sides are meeting regularly. In fact, my stopover in London on the way to St. Petersburg is to meet with our management team and the DB management team, so we are having kind of a one and a half day management off-site in London the next couple of days, and then as I said I will be on my way to Russia. So expect the teams to be doing a lot more of that. Once we get through the vote, I think we will be communicating a lot more about how the integration process is going and how the regulatory process is going. I got a lot of questions on that last week from the shareholders, which tells me they are looking past the vote, what are you are going to be working on the rest of the year. So you will probably see us out messaging a lot without front-running the regulators on how those different processes are going in and around the world.

Lastly, I had a meeting this morning with one of our big transacting clients. We've met more than 150 of our trading clients since we announced the deal in mid-February. And we are going to keep doing that over and over again, just to continue to give them a chance to ask questions that they might have about the merger. As you can appreciate, some of our big trading clients are wondering, are we going to be too big, are we going to be too powerful, etc., so we are trying to remind them what's in it for them as well. So throughout this process, stay client-focused, the IPO calendar here and in Europe continues to be very strong. Stay focused on your clients, stay close to them. We will be back at the end of this month with the monthly note, and then I'll try to give some visibility into how Q2 is shaping up. Two good months behind us, volume is obviously slowing down on a lot of our businesses around the world, but I think we are still hanging in there pretty well.

So keep executing and I will be in touch when I get back from Europe. Thanks a lot. Have a great day!
