Commission File No.: 1-9026

This filing relates to a planned merger (the "Merger") between Hewlett-Packard Company ("HP") and Compaq Computer Corporation ("Compaq") pursuant to the terms of an Agreement and Plan of Reorganization, dated as of September 4, 2001 (the "Merger Agreement"), by and among HP, Heloise Merger Corporation and Compaq. The Merger Agreement is on file with the Securities and Exchange Commission as an exhibit to the Current Report on Form 8-K, as amended, filed by Hewlett-Packard Company on September 4, 2001, and is incorporated by reference into this filing.

The following article relating to the Merger presents highlights from a discussion session with HP employees led by Carleton S. Fiorina, HP's Chairman of the Board and Chief Executive Officer, and Ann M. Livermore, President, HP Services. The article is posted on HP's internal web site.

ROSEVILLE RALLY

CEO CARLY FIORINA AND HP SERVICES PRESIDENT ANN LIVERMORE VISIT ROSEVILLE, CALIFORNIA, FOR A COFFEE TALK WITH EMPLOYEES.

The HP-Compaq merger was foremost on employees' minds as CEO Carly Fiorina and Ann Livermore, HP Services president, rolled into Roseville, California, for a coffee talk November 28. Approximately 700 employees gathered in the cafeteria to participate directly in the session, while another 850 gathered to watch the broadcast in several locations across the sprawling Roseville campus.

Ann and Carly delivered brief introductions, touching on how the merger will benefit HP's services business, the changes driving the IT industry and the choices the company must make if it is to perform up to its full potential. Then, during a lengthy Q&A session, the two leaders addressed a number of issues employees sent their way, including the PC business, media commentary on Carly's leadership, and lessons HP managers have learned from past mergers.

BOON TO SERVICES

The HP-Compaq merger allows HP to "make the first move in what we believe is going to be a very, very major transformation" throughout the industry, Ann told the audience. Several shifts are altering the maturing IT industry, she said. As industry revenue growth rates slow and business models change, ongoing revenue streams increasingly are becoming necessary to fuel strong R&D investments.

The combination produces some "phenomenal advantages" to HP's services business, Ann explained.

"Clearly, bigger is better," she said. "So, from the services business perspective, HP and Compaq are No. 3 combined. Bigger is better because customers care about your capacity to do big global deals and the combination basically doubles everything that we have."

The value of a large support business, she went on to say, should not be discounted. This business provides the foundation for the total customer experience and customer loyalty, allows the company to sell additional products and services, and delivers a predictable, high-profit revenue stream.

"There's no question that Hewlett-Packard is the best at delivering mission-critical solutions to our customers running in any operating environment," she continued. "Our multi-vendor, multi-technology capabilities -- we will truly have capabilities across every technology that's available."

The merger will also allow HP to build on strengths in vertical areas such as telecommunications, manufacturing, financial services and government, Ann stated.

TO SPIN OR NOT TO SPIN

Carly began by thanking Roseville employees for their contributions to an "outstanding" fourth quarter and a tough but productive 2001. Reminding the audience of what she covered on her first visit two years ago -- strategy, balance and performing up to the company's full potential -- she said she has seen considerable progress.

Some employees have asked her why it is so important that HP has a healthy computing business and why the company simply doesn't spin off the imaging and printing business, Carly said.

The reasons, she responded, are twofold. "One, when you're a cash cow, you don't get invested in," she said. "You just get milked. So, if we want to stay a leader in imaging and printing, we have to have healthy businesses so that we can continue to invest in it for leadership."

In addition, advances in imaging and printing depend on capabilities in services and in the computing business, she added. "Anybody use a digital camera lately?" she asked the audience. "That experience would not be as useful as it is without all the things we understand about the computing infrastructure, the software, the hardware and the networking capabilities."

LOOKING AT OPTIONS

During the Q&A session, Carly discussed the options available to restore ailing businesses such as PCs and Windows-based servers.

The HP-Compaq merger brings a "scope and a scale" that will allow the new HP to achieve "massive leverage" on its cost structure, gain a larger customer installed base and boost revenue, she added.

Despite challenges in the PC and Windows-based server businesses, Carly noted, HP is one of the few technology companies that has remained profitable through the downturn.

KEEPING THE FOCUS ON CUSTOMERS

When an employee inquired about the media and financial community's views on Carly's leadership, HP's CEO stressed the importance of focusing on customers' perceptions.

"The vast majority of customers I've talked to get this, get what we're doing, believe we've made huge progress as a company and, therefore, are saying, 'let's go,'" she told the audience.

"If we serve customers well, shareowners will follow," she continued.

HP has learned several lessons from its past acquisitions, she said in response to another employee.

"Among other things, you better have your strategy set before you go buy somebody," she said. "In other words, buying someone is not a strategy."

It's also vital for companies to have "very clear targets" about where the value lies, how to get the value out and who will take on specific tasks, she added. Another lesson learned, she noted, is to have individuals dedicated to the integration so others can focus on business as usual.

Carly encouraged employees and managers to take advantage of the information -- including a recent interview conducted with HP Board member Dick Hackborn -- about the merger available on [HP's internal web site].
