COHEN & STEERS REIT AND PREFERRED INCOME FUND, INC.

October 9, 2003

To Our Shareholders:

We are pleased to submit to you our report for the quarter ended September 30, 2003, the fund's first full quarter of operations. The net asset value per common share at that date was $24.68. The fund declared its first three monthly dividends of $0.17 per share for the months of August, September and October to common shareholders of record on August 15, 2003, September 15, 2003 and October 15, 2003, respectively. During the quarter, we completed the investment of our initial equity capital as well as the deployment of the majority of the additional proceeds raised through the issuance of $620 million in Auction Market Preferred Shares in late August. Additionally, we entered into several interest rate swap transactions that substantially lock in our cost of leverage, thereby reducing the impact that an increase in interest rates could have on the fund's investment income. The average maturity of the fund's interest rate swaps is approximately five years, and the average fixed rate is 3.7%. We note, however, that the use of leverage generally may increase the volatility of the fund's net asset value per share.

For the quarter, Cohen & Steers REIT and Preferred Income Fund had a total return, based on income and change in net asset value, of 5.0%. As of September 30, 2003, the fund had invested approximately $1.57 billion, or 87% of its total assets. Of this amount, 54% was invested in REIT common stocks and 33% was invested in preferred and debt securities.

REIT MARKET OVERVIEW

The REIT bull market rolled on in the third quarter, in a fashion totally consistent with what we expected at this point in the economic and real estate cycle. In our view, prices rose because investors recognized the bottoming of fundamentals, turned their attention to the recovery currently in force and anticipated that the recovery would continue over the next several quarters. We believe that recent developments and events validated this price advance. This has frustrated the growing chorus of REIT skeptics, many of whom believe that the sector had outperformed for too long and valuations were stretched to unsustainable levels. Analyst predictions -- such as 'REITs will lag a rising stock market' and 'REITs are interest rate sensitive' -- never came to pass as REITs performed well as stock prices rose and interest rates experienced a record increase.

Widespread expectations by economists that U.S. GDP grew 5% in the third quarter had a positive impact on most asset classes, with the exception of long-term bonds. This economic strength was evidenced by improving consumer and business confidence, strong retail sales, increasing factory orders and growing manufacturing strength. Despite concerns about the 'jobless recovery,' signs finally appeared that job losses were abating and, by September, there was an actual increase in jobs.

Indicators of improving health in the property market abound. Commentators have noted that vacancy rates in the office sector appear to be nearing their bottom. The prospect for future job growth should facilitate further improvement in this sector. In addition, developers and lenders have shown much greater restraint in this downturn than in the office market in the early 1990s, which should help the market recover more quickly than it did in the last recession. The apartment sector, which has been battered over the past several years, showed moderate signs of improvement during the third quarter. Indicators such as revenue per available room in the hotel industry turned positive for the first time in over two years, and hotel stocks were the star performers of the quarter, rising 21%. Retail sales trends and as a result regional mall fundamentals continued to be very positive and the stocks rose over 13% in the quarter.

The industry-wide improvement in REIT balance sheets and growth prospects has continued unabated this year. The refinancing or retirement of high cost debt and preferred stock has improved financial strength and flexibility. This, in turn, has enhanced equity values. Still, it is notable that unsecured borrowing by REITs this year, at $6.4 billion, trails the $8.1 billion raised in the same period last year, suggesting that REITs are taking advantage of low interest rates without increasing financial leverage. Many companies have taken advantage of strong stock prices to issue what we consider to be judicious amounts of common equity. This equity has in many cases been used to replace debt or make property acquisitions, often contributing to increased earnings. Whereas some commentators and analysts have argued that equity issuance is a warning sign, the $3.8 billion in common equity raised in the first nine months of 2003 significantly trails the $4.7 billion raised in the same period of 2002. (As a point of reference, the record for REIT equity issuance was $20 billion in 1997.) Further, considering that the equity market capitalization of the REIT industry is now over $200 billion, this equity issuance is rather insignificant.

Many commentators and analysts have attributed the REIT rally simply to money flows, implying that rising prices are exclusively the result of irrational technical factors rather than fundamental factors. Indeed, while $3.0 billion has been invested in real estate mutual funds so far this year, this is well below absolute levels experienced historically. (As with equity issuance, fund inflows reached their peak in 1997, with $4.1 billion of new assets being invested in real estate mutual funds.) Further, as a percentage of the existing $23.5 billion in fund assets, it is an even less significant statistic. This flow of funds, in our opinion, is the result of the aforementioned fundamental factors. To believe that funds flows are the drivers of bull markets in our view places cause and effect in reverse order. Demand for an asset class is based on its investment merits, and that is what causes money to flow into that asset class.

PREFERRED MARKET OVERVIEW

The preferred market was remarkably resilient throughout the quarter despite a meaningful weakening in Treasury bond prices. Demand for high-income securities, including preferreds, continued to be very strong, and credit risk spreads on preferreds narrowed during the quarter. However, we were able to take advantage of the short periods of market weakness whenever they emerged, particularly during the brief spike in interest rates during July. There were also points in the quarter when we believed that certain segments of the preferred market, particularly foreign U.S. dollar-denominated preferreds and U.S. institutionally traded issues, offered better value than the U.S.

$25 par exchange-traded market. Due to much greater liquidity and, in our view, much better fundamental attractiveness, such instruments make up a meaningful proportion of the fund.

As we near the end of our initial investment program, we are pleased that we have been able to achieve our diversification and credit quality objectives. As of September 30, 2003, 90% of the fund's preferred and other fixed income holdings are of investment grade quality, and the fund has broad exposure to many different industry sectors. Our largest weightings are in the financial, auto and utility sectors, which collectively comprise approximately 26% of the fund's total assets. Financial companies are the largest issuers of preferred securities, comprising roughly 60% of the market. We find that financials offer relatively strong regulatory and other protections that can be lacking in other sectors. Earnings for U.S. and many European banks remain quite strong, and non-performing assets are low. Certain life and property & casualty insurance company preferreds also offer attractive yields, in our view. Insurers continue to enjoy strong demand for their products and have pricing power in certain segments. Utilities are another meaningful sector holding. In this sector we have avoided certain 'turnaround' companies, preferring to stick with issuers we consider to have remained sound throughout the troubles that the utility industry has experienced since 2001. While we are comfortable with certain turnaround stories, we generally have not found adequate yield compensation in the preferreds of weaker issuers. By comparison, auto issues, which also have challenging fundamentals, appear to us to offer more compelling value.

INVESTMENT OUTLOOK

Perhaps the most passionate debate in the REIT industry revolves around the current level of stock valuations. Following their strong price advance this year, REITs are trading, on average, at a modest premium to net asset value (NAV), approximately 5% to 10% compared to their long-term average of 0%. In addition, they are trading at a price/cash flow multiple of 11.5, above their long-term average of 11.3. REIT skeptics assert that this limits any further upside price potential, and makes them vulnerable to a price decline. Overlooked, however, is the fact that improving fundamentals are already translating into higher earnings -- thereby resulting in declining future price/cash flow ratios. Similarly, as property level cash flows increase, so are underlying property values. Almost every company that has reported or forecasted improving operations has seen Wall Street earnings estimates and NAV estimates rise, sometimes substantially.

Just as fundamental events have validated price movements to date, further strong returns from REITs (as well as stocks in general), will require the anticipation of ongoing improvement in economic and real estate fundamentals. As this economic recovery proceeds, we expect continued increases in earnings and NAV estimates. As long as this prospect remains intact, we would expect share prices to perform in accordance.

With respect to our outlook for the major property sectors, our portfolio weights reflect our view that the office sector is in the early stages of recovery, while it still has some of the lowest valuations. Regional mall growth rates have remained strong and valuations have remained favorable; however, dividend yields have been driven down, causing us to have a low weight in this sector. Rising interest rates and the creation of new jobs have begun to improve apartment demand, and we have found several attractively valued companies offering appealing dividend yields in the apartment sector. Industrial valuations appear to already anticipate an early recovery in fundamentals, and with acceptable yield difficult to find, we have a low weight in this property type. While shopping center fundamentals have remained sound, we believe the sector is fully valued and likely to experience a slowing growth rate.

We are optimistic about the preferred market despite some expected challenges ahead. The persistence of a low interest rate environment suggests that demand for higher income securities will remain strong; by comparison, the pipeline of new corporate bond and preferred issues appears to be moderate. The improving corporate earnings backdrop, consistent with the global economic recovery we see unfolding, supports our positive credit view. Also important, inflation, which is the greatest threat to long-term fixed-income securities and will signal the next Fed tightening cycle, appears to remain well in check. In short, we see an economic recovery emerging, in which case yields on income securities could rise somewhat over the next year.

Based on our positive view of the economy and the relative valuation between REITs and preferreds, we have positioned the fund with a slightly higher weight in REIT common stocks. This asset mix reflects our belief that we are at the beginning of both a new economic and real estate cycle, and that REITs are very well-positioned to prosper in such an environment. This framework would likely result in an improving credit profile for our preferred holdings. Whereas pricing upside could be limited, on a relative basis, by any increase in interest rates that may accompany an improving economy, preferred stocks continue to provide the potential for above-average current income while lowering portfolio volatility.

Sincerely,

MARTIN COHEN
