Dennis Wheeler, CEO, Coeur d Alene Mines:

Simon Constable:

Hi, you're watching TheStreet.com TV. I'm Simon Constable, and I write for TheStreet.com. Today I'm joined by Dennis Wheeler. He is CEO of Coeur d Alene Mines, which is the largest primary silver producer in the world. Welcome back to TheStreet.com.

Dennis Wheeler:

Great to be here again with you, Simon.

Constable:

I've been looking at the stock price chart for Coeur d Alene Mines. And basically it seems since last May stocks have gone from around seven to currently around three and a half - not great performance. You were saying earlier it's been performing better in recent weeks. What's going on? What's been dogging the stock?

Wheeler:

Well, of course, we had a decline overall in the index, beginning last, May. The stock has been performing, reasonably well in recent weeks, but two things I think are attributable to our unlocked value: One is people are waiting to see what happens, in Bolivia politically and tax-wise where our San Bartolome project - nine million ounces of silver a year - is on-schedule and on-budget, will come back online in 2009. I've just come back from Bolivia, and I think the government is exhibiting improved attitude on resolving those questions.

Constable:

So it's not going the Chavez route, then of sort of acquisition...?

Wheeler:

No, not at all. They've, they've been moderate the last month or so there. I expect that to continue. And, secondly, in Alaska, our Kensington Gold Mine, where we are still building, but the Corps of Engineers that issued our permit has been, sued by some environmental organizations...

Constable:

And that was a suit about disposal of waste rock is that right?

Wheeler:

That's right to prevent that disposal into a lake. And, we're patiently working through that and, uh, having discussions. And hopefully we'll find a way to resolve that as well.

Constable:

Now the other big thing that's been happening has been the acquisition of another silver company by Coeur d'Alene. How's that going?

Wheeler:

Yeah, we were on schedule there. We've got a major acquisition with a Canadian and Australian affiliated companies, that will basically double the size...

Constable:

That's, that's Pa Palmarejo [sic]...

Wheeler:

Palmarejo and Bolnisi Gold, that will basically double the size of our company. It'll by far and away make us the leader in terms of silver reserves and resources. It'll materially put us as competitor [sic] it'll be in terms of the cost-curve for the industry. And...

Constable:

And is, isn't that an accretive to earning statement acquisition?

Wheeler:

After the first two years, we expect to be strong. We come, creative [phonetic] we'll produce about thirty-two million ounces of silver and about two hundred and thirty thousand ounces of gold.

Constable:

Well, that, that's great. Now, to wrap up: Where do you see the silver market going? Because that's clearly what's going to drive in some ways, what's going to drive more the stock price than anything else.

Wheeler:

Silver price has increased fifty-eight percent last year a better performance than gold. I expect higher prices in the metal again this year, for strong fundamentals metal supply and demand reasons. Growth continues in the industrial section, which needs nearly four hundred and fifty million ounces of silver a year. China consumption increased ten percent, but it's the world's most widely consumed widely-used metal with new technologies and medical applications and electronics required every year.

Constable:

Or, or some soaked [sic] silver about, around thirteen to fourteen dollars an ounce at the moment. Where's it, where's it going?

Wheeler:

Well, I, I, I...

Constable:

I know you said higher, but do you want to put a number on it?

Wheeler:

Well, I don't know. Analysts seem to be talking about fifteen dollars. I'm very comfortable with silver going forward because of the basically flat mine supply with increasing demand every year another, thirty to forty million ounces.

Constable:

Thank you very much.

Wheeler:

Thank you, Simon.

Constable:

That was Dennis Wheeler, CEO of Coeur d Alene Mines; and me, Simon Constable, for TheStreet.com TV. Stay tuned for more.
