Q: What will happen to my stock options?

A: Upon closing, all BellSouth stock options (regular and special) would be converted into AT&T stock options. All such options will be immediately vested and exercisable. The term of these stock options (i.e., their expiration dates) will remain the same. The number of AT&T options that you will be entitled to after the merger will be the number of your BellSouth options times 1.325. The strike price of the new AT&T options will be the old strike price divided by 1.325. Below is a summary of what would happen to the exercise periods of all the new AT&T stock options (regular and special) in different situations:

Situation	What Happens
Remain employed by AT&T	Remain exercisable until end of full original term
Retirement	Remain exercisable until end of full original term
Separate: non-retirement eligible	Remain exercisable until end of full original term
Involuntary termination (not for cause) at anytime	Remain exercisable until end of full original term

Q: What will happen to my restricted stock and restricted stock units (RSUs)?

A: Upon closing, BellSouth restricted stock and RSUs would be converted into AT&T restricted stock and RSUs, respectively, with the same vesting periods as are applicable to your BellSouth grants. The number of shares of AT&T restricted stock and RSUs that you will be entitled to after the merger will be the number of your shares of BellSouth restricted stock or RSUs times 1.325. Below is a summary of what would happen with the vesting schedule of your AT&T restricted stock and RSUs (regular and special) in different situations:

Remaining BellSouth performance shares would be forfeited. AT&T will issue replacement AT&T performance shares (to replace the forfeited BellSouth performance shares).
